THE London Mail of 11th Nov., due in Hongkong on the 26th ultimo, and here on the 2nd inst. It was received last year on the 2nd January per l-y-ee-moon.

MUCH has been advanced latterly concerning the construction of defensive works at the landward approaches to Shanghai. On this important question various opinions have been promulgated. Some residents, whose opinions are entitled to consideration, object even to the construction of a wooden barrier or gate, because these might obstruct the thoroughfares for horses, carriages, or the conveyance of Artillery. British residents especially object to surrounding our little city with lines of circumvallation, moats, drawbridges or gates, as remnants of barbarous times. Of course, in this nineteenth century they are not accustomed to see such works around the cities of their own sea-girt isles, but that is because England depends chiefly on coast defences, her fleets at sea and in the channel. As it has been quaintly remarked—"The institutions of Britain are preserved in brine," and therein lies her safeguard from invasion.

The same argument applies in some measures to the British colony of Hongkong in Southern China. There no hostile force of dangerous strength could make a sudden landing to attack the city of Victoria, without being exposed to a galling fire from the ships of war in harbour, and which are able at any time to circumnavigate the island. Here, in the Settlement of Shanghai, we are not safely situated; neither have we anything like the same naval and military forces to protect us. We are located on the mainland of this immense continent, in such a low country that for a hundred miles, in a circuit from north-west to south-east veering westerly, there is not a hill to be found higher than Primrose Hill in London.

This alluvial region has been formed by the sediment brought down from the upper mountain districts of the Yangtsze River and its tributaries, forming lakes, ana-branches and embouchures innumerable. These are again intersected by artificial creeks, canals, and ditches, the ramifications of which extend probably to not less than ten thousand miles, one-third of which being navigable for boats or ships from a sampan to a frigate. Such a territory—it will strike the intellectual reader—while showing great facilities for commerce, is one peculiarly adapted to the tactics of the bands of marauders who have recently hovered around the walled city and foreign Settlement of Shanghai. A land force or compact body of men would have no chance of bringing them to close quarters, where they can retreat in a hundred different directions by the boats pressed into their service from among the peaceable inhabitants. Again, these numerous approaches render the Settlement vulnerable at so many points that it behoves the authorities to see at once to the erection of proper defences. Here we are a mere handful of people, amongst whom are merchants who deal, not merely in tens of thousands but in millions sterling annually; with a host of godowns belonging to Chinese as well as foreigners, containing incalculable wealth in coin, ingots of silver, jewels, merchandise, silk, tea, opium and other valuable commodities. What temptation is there here for impoverished rebels! what "loot" for these lawless bands of marauders! If they were aware of one-fourth of the wealth to be found within the Settlement, what would they not risk—if in a reduced state from want of food—to seize the prize before them!

Under these circumstances it is only a matter of prudence to anticipate such a possible contingency, by strengthening our land defences; not by constructing Chinese wicker-work gates or barriers, but erecting substantial works at the outskirts of the Settlement. Of course the objection to anything costly would be the difficulty in obtaining sufficient means for the outlay—which, if furnished alone by the foreign residents and Chinese, would fall very heavily upon them. Even then it would be paying only a small portion of the wealth to be guarded by securing efficient protection, to say nothing of personal security. The governments of the Treaty Powers might contribute to their construction by a subsidy, inasmuch as they would lessen the charge to the parent states, by maintaining fewer soldiers than is required in our present defenceless condition. Moreover, the Taou-tai, on behalf of the Chinese Government, should be called on to contribute, as such military works would be further protection to the walled city against the cupidity of those wretched ruffians who glory in shedding the blood of their fellow-countrymen for the sake of "filthy lucre."

As to the plan of defence, and the exact nature of the works to be erected, we are of opinion that these should be laid out by our most skilful engineering authorities on land and sea. Such, we understand, are now under consideration by the committee appointed at the Meeting of Land Renters on the 3rd instant for the purpose of entertaining Mr. E. M. Smith's proposition. We understand that the principle put forth by that gentleman of erecting turret gates armed with ordnance, and cutting a wide canal from the Yang-king-pang to the Soochow Creek, is not only likely to be carried out but improved upon. Instead of barrier gates, it is proposed to erect Martello towers at short distances along the western boundary of the Settlement, and to cut a deep canal fifty feet wide, so as to allow a gunboat to navigate it. These Martello towers will be heavily armed, and command every landward approach to the Settlement. For the purpose of constructing them of the best material for strength and durability it is proposed to raise the sum of one hundred thousand taels. The details of the military and financial scheme likely to be recommended by the committee will not transpire until the next meeting takes place, to receive their report upon Mr. Smith's proposals. We are glad to learn that the gentlemen forming the committee are unanimous in the necessity of erecting efficient defensive works; and should these be carried out, the community—native and foreign—will owe a deep debt of gratitude to Mr. E. M. Smith, through whose agency and public spirit the matter was first proposed on a practical plan.

FROM the communications of our correspondent at Nanking, published in our columns this day, and other intelligence of a private nature, it would appear that the Taiping rebels are becoming more audacious in their intercourse with foreigners, and they do not hesitate in shewing it. Even their friends the missionaries are becoming doubtful of their assumed friendly sincerity. One zealous member of that body, resident for some time at Nanking, has left that desolate city and come to Shanghai, under the fear that the Taiping chiefs were going to do him some bodily injury or to incarcerate him. Another missionary, recently arrived from England, introduced himself to the Tien-wang, who received him with great condescension, but let him to understand that he must acknowledge him not only as the "Heavenly Father" and "Younger Brother" of the Godhead, but that his son must also be considered as divine, making therefore four persons in the Taiping theocracy. This shocked the missionary so much that he at once resolved on leaving this blasphemous council of Satan; but the Tien-wang showed no desire to let him go, so he had to claim the protection of the British authorities and thought himself lucky to get out of their clutches scatheless.

It is averred also upon most reliable authority that the Tien-wang exacts the most degrading adulation from his followers, not excepting the foreign missionaries. When he appears in the public council hall, he assumes the aspect of a Buddhist god, seating himself upon an elevated throne, with his head-dress and robes shaped after the fashion of the stout gentleman with the elevated eyebrows, whom we see in every temple. In giving audience to his underlings, they must hotow to him in the most abject manner, under fear of being bamboo'd. Even the missionaries are forced to hotow to him; and it is said that the Reverend Mr. Roberts, when he wants any favour to be granted, approaches His Mightiness on all fours.

All this is very despicable and degrading, and would be simply amusing were it not calculated to bring the foreign community into contempt, which it does in the eyes of these vagabond Taipings. But there is more significance in this altered aspect of affairs than appears on the surface. Probably the leaders of the movement seeing that they have failed to secure the active co-operation of foreigners against the Imperial rule, by their assumption of quasi Christian doctrines, are now about to cast off the mask and treat all as enemies—whether foreign or native—who will not subscribe to their diabolical tenets. Whether the assumption of this audaciousness proceeds from their supposed growing strength, it is difficult to judge from outward appearances; and it is just as likely that, as desperate men, seeing their power daily diminishing, will assume an appearance of strength, so they try to look stronger than they really are. However that may be, it is apparent to every foreigner who visits Nanking, that the Taiping rebels have instituted a "Reign of Terror" in that city. The slightest faults are punished in the most sanguinary manner, especially if there is suspicion of dissension from the rotten theocratic proclamations issued. What surprises most intelligent foreigners is how so much evil can hold together. If, as many conclude, that there are dissensions amongst the chiefs, then may we see the whole fabric of this movement broken up by its own members. Already the military leaders are finding that the strength of the insurrection lies in their hands, and they are jealous of the assumption of supreme authority by the "Wangs" at headquarters. Grant that it may be so, and we shall speedily witness the downfall of Taipingdom.

TAIPING PROCLAMATION.

Hung Prince of Kan, Mêng Junior Prince of Tsan, Li Prince of Shun, of the Heavenly Kingdom of Great Peace—issue the following proclamation for the information of the civil and military of all grades and classes.

This our humble opinion that the Heavenly Dynasty will be to everlasting prosperous, as prognostics without number, have foreshadowed that it will be thus, and the imps will be hereafter exterminated an account of the serious calamities which have happened. We have evidence of the intention of Heaven to obliterate the demons in causing the death of Hsien-fêng. The hearts of men must revert to the Supreme One, and become heroes in the sight of the lofty azure heaven. The Heavenly Father Shangti and the Heavenly Elder Brother Christ bestowed upon us their special Heavenly favours, and commanded our Sainted One and the adopted Son of the Redeemer of the World to come down upon our earth to take the supreme control of it (hills and streams). In the year Ting-yu, the Sainted One ascended to Heaven and the Father delivered unto him ——— and a volume of verse, with instruction that at the time the myriad feathered tribes should come to do homage to the Emperor, the prediction that there should spring up a son of the Emperor, and that the house in which he was to be born should be encircled in one glorious halo of brilliancy—to thereby manifest the imprint or footsteps of divine revelation—should be then fulfilled.

When we set out from the golden fields (Kuangsi) Heavenly troops in secret tended their aid in helping us to cross Tung-ting [Lake]. The lake was without a wave to ruffle its surface. Since crossing we have established upon a solid (or firm) foundation a Heavenly Capital, which has remained so already over a period of more than ten years, and peace now reigns over two-thirds of the Empire. It happened (or came to pass) that on the 16th of the 7th moon the chief imp, Hsien-fêng,* died, leaving a son to, rule who has not yet attained the age of five years. The dishonest ministers who are in power will convert misfortunes into a new scene of life, which although it may endure for a time, the day is not far off when they will be exterminated (when their light or lamp will be extinguished).

A man of noble disposition will never oppress the widow or the fatherless. Can we feel any delight in causing calamities and misfortunes? [No, we cannot.] It was the decree of Heaven alone which terminated the power of him who was carried off in the prime of life. Scholars and men of note ought to show themselves forth in these troublous times; and, moreover, as your father's and mother's hair has been cut and the dresses, &c., of a former age have been spoilt, you ought to be still more enthusiastic to do so. All power is in the hands of the Manchoos, and the whole is concentrated in one demon chief, who wastes the revenue in finery and frivolous things. The sum of 8,000,000 taels is collected annually, and lu-szu-li, which grows in the White Mountains, yields every year more than 8,000,000 taels. Our country is thereby robbed of its precious store, and our bodies and souls are poisoned with opium—80,000,000 taels a year being uselessly expended on this drug. Throughout the eighteen cities men have been taught to worship the demon Fuh (Buddha), our laws have been entirely destroyed by the Manchoos, and our kindred made answerable for the observance of each of their rules. Hsieh-fang-tê preferred to die rather than to serve the Yüan Dynasty. Chü-shih-szu, by the laws which he enacted for the Board of Appointments, and by the oath which he took, proved him not to be a treacherous minister. If we do not embrace the present favourable time, i.e., the demise of the demon, and the establishment of his guilty offspring on the throne, to wipe away or revenge the many centuries of debasement which our nation has suffered and which our forefathers have not cleared off, then China will be hereafter falling into its own calamities and be unable to extricate itself from the oppression which they will entail, and her fame will be unworthy to be handed down to future generations. You are all of the flowery nation, and your ancestors of the Hsia descent. All are sons and daughters of Heaven, and not more nor less than brethren of one family and descent. Wherefore is it then, that you willingly devote yourselves wholly to the service of the Yao-hu, and the demon blackguards (Yao-tsai), and evince no desire yet to yield up the cities to us? Can we, being so vast a nation, voluntarily yield up our lives and be reduced to misery for (the sake of) a petty (trumpery) imp of five years old, or bend our knees or bow down our heads to him? [No, certainly not.] Out of the eighteen cities, three are defiled by Manchoo control, and out of five hundred myriad myriad men over 3,000,000 have to submit to the disgrace of being under the Tartar-demon rule. Truly our wrath is great. How lamentable! how miserable! how grievous in the extreme for China! how unworthy to face Shangti and to appear in the sight of men!

If we look at the stain which the Tartars have cast upon China, we find that the amount of oppression which it has caused is difficult to sum up. For the demon rule implanted itself in the time of Shun-chih, who caused disturbance throughout the empire, and to whom must be imputed the whole of the guilt. Throughout the eighteen cities the greater part of the good people were slain (butchered), and during a period of eighteen years the men of Kuang-tung and Fookien preferred death rather than yield to the conqueror. After him (Shun-chih) came K'ang-he, who induced his younger sister to become his favourite concubine. Kung-ting-nieh was deluded by him into the acceptance of a spurious title of "Officer of the Household," and paid the price for his own ruin. Behind the curtain of the room even the demons gave forth utterances of their disapproval. Kei's lewd and wicked deeds are known everywhere, and can no more be cleared off than the thorns or grass (tzu) on a city wall. Subsequent to Yung-chêng and Ch'ien-lung, a treacherous minister Ho-shêng arrogated unto himself the power, and made rank and title a saleable article. His influence was as poisonous as the bitter herb (tú) and as devouring as the ching-no.† In the reigns of Chin-ch'ing and Tao-kuang we find Mu-chang-ah receiving bribes for the bestowal of official rank, and having the reputation of being in favour with the Imperial Household and pleasing in the sight of men. On his course, however, he was met by a Chinese official Wang-ting, who drew up the draft of a complaint against him, contained in eighteen clauses. Mu-chang-ah obtained a decree for the degradation of Wang-ting's elder relations, and conferred on his grandchild Chang-pei a spurious title of Vice President, which, contrary to expectation, called forth flattery and adulation from the lips of Wang-ting, and had the effect of bringing the affair to a termination. His (Mu-chang-ah's) evil deeds have defiled both pen and ink, and, when reflecting on his conduct, our bowels are still more pained within us. The reputation of rising to the highest rank cannot be obtained by Manchoo men.

The first person who rose to the highest rank in the examination hall established by them, was Liu-tzu-chuang; but although of the chief rank, still after all he was not considered worthy of employment. The rank of Chuang-yuan (first e Kang-wang here speaks of himself.

This proclamation is the best one which has as yet been issued; but its meaning is somewhat complicated and obscure, and any clear-headed person in perusing the first part of it will be struck with its peculiarity. I will not say where this is, because from being unable to deduce from those children of Tien-wang its meaning, I am hence unable to give any explanation or to elucidate any of the theories which it may inculcate, or the doctrines which it may profess to teach.

There is one thing pleasing about it, which is that there is not so much Tien-fu-ism as there is in some of the proclamations. But it appears to me that it ought to be promulgated in places where Great Peace has as yet been unable to throw its mantle of protection, but where it aspires to do so at some future period. I am sure we may infer thus much from certain parts of the proclamation. We have to observe in fine that we cannot see the justice of laying the evil of smoking opium on the Manchoo shoulder, seeing that the drug is wholly or nearly so used in Canton, from which place most of our friends have sprung, and we are all pretty well aware that the scum of China revels in Canton and the Golden Fields.

THE TAIPING CHIEFS IN PUBLIC AND PRIVATE AT NANKING.

To the Editor of the NORTH-CHINA HERALD.

SIR,—We are exceedingly sorry that we are unable to give you full and explicit accounts of the inhabitants of Nanking, stereoscopic sketches, as you are wont to call them, are as much as we dare attempt; and in fact it is rather bold on our part when in the possession of no experience or capability to attempt even thus much. Would that we could tell you all about Nanking and delineate the rebel character as we find it, but as you had a lucid description conveyed to your readers in your columns some time ago under the title of "Nanking and its inhabitants," by an able person, it would be utter vagueness and presumption on our part were we able to think of attempting any details for your readers. All the accounts from this quarter would only tend to detract from the religious nature of the Taipings, for we should only be inclined to give utterance to language expressive of our disfavour towards them, and by so doing it may be, we should be considered as designedly offensive in the eyes of the foreign rebels, or to speak less rudely, in the eyes of those who partly side with this horde of villains, as they are termed. We must not attempt to reduce them to the scale which it appears to us they ought to hold, but we will let them alone until we are competent to give our opinion, adding in the meanwhile that a visit to the capital will satisfy the hope and expectations of all the ardent lovers of the great diffusers of Universal Peace. We will always do our best to take as impartial and correct a view of Taipingdom as we are able. To become enlightened with the very intelligent and thoroughly business-like manner in which affairs pertaining to the Heavenly Kingdom are carried on, and the surpassing cleverness of some of those in control, we must invite you to repair to the land of Great Peace, to the land where the Heavenly Father was believed in former times to come down and visit the Tung-wang, and when chastisement used to fall on the Tienwang, if he did not appear at the proper time to the land where coolies, in the garb of princes, assume to themselves great power and influence. We must invite you to hold a consultation with the far-famed Thuangú man, the pluralist in office, Leang, and judge for yourself the capacity of his intellect, the sweet temper combined with the amiable and good countenance which he possesses, are sufficient to cause the one who bears the greatest antipathy towards the rebels to hold this individual in high esteem and regard. His temper is sweet to a degree, and when his ire is excited what will he be not do? His natural appearance is considerably enhanced in beauty when ting ya tén-yeng he goes through sundry evolutions with his double-edged knife, demonstrating, in clear and plain language, his treatment of gamblers when he discovers them—how, with the knife hidden behind him, he stealthily advances upon the unsuspecting one and severs his head from his body. We must tell him that we cannot credit what he says; but he tells us of a truth that he has taken heads off, and that he really does not spare when he has a chance of inflicting punishment. En passant this reminds me of a scene which I witnessed when on a stroll to a village yclept Chiang-tung-chino, and which I will just relate as evidence of the wild state of the rebels. It was that of one man hacking another's head off with what appeared to be an ordinary-sized knife. We had landed from our boat and were just entering the place when we saw a collection of some half dozen fellows standing round a man who to our imagination seemed as if he were punching—as the phrase has it—the head of another man, who was lying on the ground. But suddenly, to our astonishment, the flash of the knife appeared, which told us but too plainly that a scene of more serious nature than a thrashing was being enacted. The executioner was obliged to resort to sawing, or running the knife to and fro at last, and when he had at length succeded, to give full vent to his feelings he hurled the head, on which the hair was already long, to some distance, evidencing, as it seemed, the existence of some deep feeling of hatred within his heart. The villain took his departure with composure—whether under the self satisfaction that his black deed had met with approval, we don't know. The head, however, was pitched back again immediately afterwards by another individual—what his intention was or why he did so, I am alike ignorant. What a dreadful death for the unfortunate one; he must have suffered intense agony, if we are to judge from the marks betrayed on his head and neck. The scene took place in the public street, and to all appearances one would have been under the impression that the victim had been dragged out by the murderer and then and there suffered the full penalty of death—we can't say of the law for there is no law there. The inhabitants are in a wild—perfectly wild state; and in fact, a greater collection of ruffians and men at variance with law and order you could not find anywhere. But strange to say, we met with great civility there; and here we must do justice to the rebels at Nanking and put in a word for them, by saying that notwithstanding all their faults they are very civil. We can speak from experience of these; of course we are not able to give the same liberal opinions of rebels outside, they may perchance be, and most probably are, anything but peaceful. From the wild nature of the inhabitants of the village we have mentioned, we are convinced and led to conclude that many are the tragedies which take place there. We were highly disgusted at what we saw, and we are quite unable to convey to you any idea of the horrid scene above detailed. We can assure you that it stamped upon our minds no favourable impression of the rebels; on the contrary, it caused the small affection which we entertained for them to vanish.

Are we to look upon these men—these renowned spreaders of Great Peace—these great blasphemers against heaven—as excelling the Manchoos in goodness, and far transcending them in the knowledge of good government? Now, what is such a scene as I have just described indicative of— is it of law and order? A man dragged into the street and put to a lingering death in the presence of a few bystanders, about as void of feeling as the murderer, and these all belonging to the Heavenly Dynasty. Why, we don't see such scenes as these in other places, and how much less ought we to expect to come upon them in places where the men are supposed to be a shade better than other men, and where Great Peace spreads its all pervading influence. If a Heavenly Dynasty can boast of such individuals as these, we don't know what degree of perfection in vice is to be attained before one can belong to the Hell Dynasty—if we may be allowed to use this for the nonce.

In former times we, in general were, wont to esteem the rebels in a favourable point of view, and regard them as sincere Christians. Why was it thus, because of our knowledge of their iconoclastic propensities or what?

Alas, in those times we formed our opinions in ignorance and without any acquaintance whatever with the real nature of these impostors. Prior to the opening of the Yang-tsze River the bare word of missionaries was all we could obtain, and the accounts furnished by them were glowing and excellent to a degree. These accounts, from want of experience, we could not do otherwise than believe. It is very strange though that, notwithstanding the partiality this class of people bore towards the rebels, none of them have ventured into the Heavenly Capital for an indifinite period, so little is their presence, and still less their doctrines, appreciated. The failure to convince the Tien-wang of his errors must be very disheartening; and, if to a query put, one is always liable to get a reply equivalent to that, when the Tienwang in reply to an agreement that Christ's kingdom would not be an earthly one, but a distinct one altogether, in fact quite dissimilar to any other kingdom, said "Well, it is just what I am trying to impress upon you, or drum into you, that this (his) kingdom is a separate one altogether, and no other than a Heavenly one"—we say that the sooner these amiable people are left to themselves the better. We decidedly think that labour expended in Nanking is only labour lost, without the attainment of any fruitful result. If the natives can treat a person when preaching to them in so insulting a manner as to threaten to stone him on the supposition that he was possessed of a devil, and if the Kan-wang can send for the gatekeeper and have him thrashed for allowing our friend, whose time was precious, to make his exit from the city at 8 o'clock in the evening, then we are bound to say that it is a hopeless case to think of convincing these rebellious ones of the error of their ways, or spreading any good amongst them. The fact of the Kang-wang punishing the delinquent with stripes—it was only by the intercession of others that he did not lose his head—tends to show the amount of affection which he entertained for our friend, for so great was this affection that he could not bear the idea of a separation. The opening of the Yang-tsze threw a light over our darkness, and unveiled Taipingdom in its quintessence; it moreover revealed to us the true character of those dwelling therein. We then discovered that we had been labouring under a great delusion, and, instead of Christians, we beheld impostors. Which fact reminded us very forcibly of a Scripture prophecy, that before the end of the world there shall arise Antichrists and false prophets who shall call themselves this and that, &c., &c.—this we have exemplified in the person of the great impostor, the Tien-wang. We should not like positively to say, that this is its fulfilment, but it is as likely as not.

We know that the Tartar dynasty is a faulty one, we know that a reform in its laws would be most beneficial, and that a regenerating influence wants to be spread over the Empire; but can we see the good influence we look for being diffused by the Taipings, and we merely ask the question, which we leave to the reflection of our readers, whether it is likely improvement would take place were the Empire under their sway?

We can only add that if you are desirous of gaining an insight into the state of Taipingdom go and visit the Heavenly Capital itself, and report on the improvement which has taken place since 1853—whether in your opinion it is likely to present a better aspect after a further lapse of eight or nine years, and whether those in control will be more competent to govern then than they are now—whether the word "myth" can be applicable in connection with it or not, or whether the word can be eschewed and the rebels looked upon in a higher light. You must not forget to call upon the renowned and worthy prime minister, the Prince of Kan. You will see the joss-like appearance which he assumes when the great gates or doors are open, and when the vulgar gaze of the outsiders has been screened, you will be entertained with a placid smile and a gentle good morning, and be then led away into a private and yet somewhat public room and requested to sit down. In the midst of a discussion, it may be, you will be enlivened with music from the harmonium by the Prince, who obstinately presses both peddles simultaneously and plays something or other, the name of the tune of which would defy the best musician to fathom. However, never mind that,—a good voice (he sings, you must know) and a fine touch, what more would you like? Remark the intelligence of the Prince; see how he likes to go round instead of taking a short cut, and what a long time is spent before he is brought to the point. He is sine qua non although dull, is nevertheless a very good fellow, and undeserving of the cataract of scandal which was and has been poured upon him at times. While you are sitting down four or five virgins will rush in with cups of tea to be duly served out, and the same will re-enter to replenish the cups shortly after. Dispatches will arrive, a virgin will break the covers and lay the documents outside, so as to be ready for the eagle glance of the great man. When they have been perused a drum will be struck by her, and another virgin will appear through a doorway, seize the documents, and carry them off. If you are sitting on the right (proper) side and turn slightly round, you will see just under the screen sundry little shoes covering divers little feet constantly in motion, and various heads taking furtive peeps round the corner. The apparel of these is a shade better than that covering the virgins who bring you the tea. We should not like to say that there is a great number of these there, but we cannot see that we are at liberty to insert the word "few" nevertheless. Shall we tell the Prince privately that his brother was a coolie in ————'s house, at Hongkong, last year; perhaps he would not like us to know that, he may be under the imagination that it is very private. Would that we could all rise in the same degree—fancy, to be a coolie at one time, and to become such a mighty man as to have command of an expedition against the Yaos soon afterwards. With such success as this, how could one contain oneself? To be decorated in a yellow cap, surmounted in the front with a jade or fei-tsiu mao hua'rh to have on gorgeous robes of Soochow manufacture, and to be in possession of such high control over the Heavenly troops—to what higher aspirations could we expect to reach?

But gently; amidst all the Kan-wang's or his brother's finery, don't ask how many dollars they have got in their pockets, because this is a delicate subject; and I know you would not like them to say honestly, "you are welcome to all you can find about us." Don't taunt them with such words as to say that all they are worth is disclosed to you in their exterior; but lay the truth on one side, and don't say they are not worth a fraction. Say they are wealthy people, and ask them privately what salary is accorded to them, in compensation for their labour and hard work. When you have transacted your business with the Kan-wang signify your intention to leave, and a shake of the hand, not dissimilar at all to that given you by a lady whom you see for the first time, together with a good morning, will terminate your visit. And here I must bring this to a close, as I hear you say let what you have said suffice until we ourselves visit the capital of a myriad, myriad years and of boundless prosperity, and have seen the palace of him whose kui-hao, it is suggested by a party, might be styled Chi-hsiao 齊消 in contradistinction to Tsai-chün's Tüng-chih.

But shall we longer take up your time with dry details, rather let us bring this to a close; and we feel ourselves the more inclined to do as we fancy we can hear you remind us that it is time to shut up. We have to remark in conclusion that all we tell you, although not inscribed in palatable and fluent language, is nevertheless true, and from our own personal observation in our own unbiassed opinion.

We are, Sir,
Yours, &c.,
THE SAME AS USUAL.

(From the Daily Shipping & Commercial News, January 9,)

ARRIVAL OF THE CADIZ.

By the P. and O. Co.'s Steamer Cadiz, we have advices from Hongkong to the 31st December, at which date no Mail from England had arrived. There were no European news of a later date than what had come to hand by the previous Mail. Later intelligence from America had reached Hongkong by the Sea Serpent from San Francisco. The dates are to the 6th November from the belligerent states, but no account as yet of the great battle which was to have come off. A fight, however, had taken place at Gauley Bridge in Cincinnati, of which the following particulars are given in the Daily Press:—

CINCINNATI, November 5.—This afternoon's Times has particulars of the late fight at Gauley Bridge. The engagement was not a general battle, but rather a warm skirmish, in which the enemy was repulsed with great loss. The action was commenced by the rebels, who opened two batteries on our lines near Gauley Bridge, but though firing was continued all day, but little or no damage was done, not one man being killed. Late in the day our artillery was brought to bear upon them, and the rebel fire was soon silenced. A train was fired upon about the same time, some miles up the river, when three men were wounded but none killed.

On Friday night Benham's brigade moved down the river to Gauley Bridge, and ferried across on a flat-boat, which the rebels had previously sunk. He moved along the base of the hill on which the rebel batteries had been planted, intending to go down as far as Loup Creek, three or four miles below, where there is a gap in the mountains, and a road leading to the rear, where the rebels are camped.

From the same journal we extract the following verdict in the case of Moss versus Alcock, for false imprisonment in the jail at Hongkong:—

In the case of Moss v. Alcock the Jury retired yesterday at half past one and gave their verdict a little after two. In the Judge's charge they were strictly bound to confine their finding to the imprisonment of the plaintiff in the Hongkong Gaol for the space of 120 hours. Two questions were put to the Jury. One as to whether the defendant had reasonable grounds for supposing that he had a right to add imprisonment to the Consul's sentence, and the other as to the damages for the 120 hours' imprisonment.

To the first the verdict replied by a majority of five to two that the defendant had no reasonable grounds for supposing he had the power to inflict imprisonment in addition to the Consul's sentence. To the second the Jury were unanimous upon damages to the extent of $2,000.

In reply to a question from the Court the Jury stated that could they have considered the wrong done in Japan to the plaintiff they would have awarded $15,000 a $20,000 in addition.

We should add that by consent the law points were all reserved.

We have taken full notes of this important case, and shall prepare a detailed report without loss of time.
